Keeping the Community in Working Order

The health and well-being of a community is dependent upon many factors. Certain diseases and illnesses are extremely contagious. Environmental conditions often lead to ill health if not addressed. Health, therefore, is dependent upon the sum of many parts.

When asked to volunteer his time as a Board Director for the Northeast Colorado Department of Health a year ago, Mike Weimer, Director of Plant Operations at Colorado Plains Medical Center didn't hesitate. At the hospital, he often sees people who are in need of treatment after an accident or illness. As a board member, he gets to help his community be proactive in terms of health and wellness. This governmental agency is responsible for control of communicable diseases, administering immunizations, tobacco use prevention, water testing, family planning, implementing health care programs for children with special needs, and performing food safety inspections and licensing.

With the recent disasters in the South, public health awareness becomes even more important. Mike is able to set policies and help oversee operations and management of the Northeast Colorado Department of Health operations. When and if a natural threat or disaster affects Morgan County, Mike is confident that the safety and well-being of his neighbors, friends and family will be protected. He enjoys being able to contribute in this small way of extending care on an outreach basis to the Morgan County communities he has called home for the past 25 years.

Our employees see their work at Colorado Plains Medical Center more than just a job. It is a commitment to the community they live in. For Mike and our 250 employees, compassion and caring are powerful doses of medicine. They love life and continue to save lives every day!
